Passage one:

When you master your people skills you will discover the benefits of building harmony with others. Here are some of the basics:

Smile: A smile shows that you are confident and like yourself, you like your current place in the world and you're happy with the people you're interacting with.

Be a good listener: Encourage others to talk about themselves. When you listen to the others you make them feel important, that you like them. As a result they like you in turn. Therefore, if you want to develop skills, you really don't have to say much at all. Ask open-ended questions and let the other person begin talking. Look them in the eye, nod your head periodically, say "uh huh" a few times, and suddenly you'll find you're the best conversationalist.

Look co-workers in the eye: Every time a person begins talking to you, look them in the eye and smile first, then get on with the conversation. Also, when you enter a meeting room smile and look around at everyone. If you want to start talking to one person or even a group, come up to them and smile.

Call people by their name: A person's name is to that person the sweetest and most

Passage two:

The meanings of time differ in different parts of the world. Thus, misunderstanding may arise between people from cultures that treat time differently. Promptness is valued highly in American life. For example, if people ate not prompt, they may be regarded as impolite or not responsible. In the U.S., no one would think of keeping a business associate for an hour, it would be too impolite.

This way of treating time is quite different from that of several other countries. This helps to explain the unfortunate experience of an agriculturist from the United States assigned to duty in another country. After what seemed to him a suitable waiting period, he announced that he would like to call on the minister of agriculture. For various reasons the suggested time did not suit the minister, here were indirect indications that the time was not yet suitable. The American, however, pressed for an appointment, which was finally granted.

Arriving a little before the appointed hour (according to the American way of showing respect), the agriculturist waited. The hour came and passed: five minutes, ten minutes, and fifteen minutes. At this point he suggested to the secretary that perhaps the minister did not know he was waiting in the outside office. This gave him the feeling of having done something to solve the problem, but he had not. Twenty minutes passed, then thirty, then forty-five. To an American, there is little that can remove the damage done by an hour's wait in an outer office. Yet in the country where this story took place, a forty-five-minute waiting period was period was not unusual. Instead of being the very end of the allowable waiting scale, it was just the beginning, thus, when the American agriculturist left the office (after giving the secretary an angry message for the minister), his action seemed as unreasonable as it was impolite.

26.	What does	"to	be	prompt"	mean	in	this	passage?
